“A grenade launcher will easily take out a tank; a Molotov cocktail placed in its air intake will destroy one as well.”

– Sebastian Junger

In food and eating, there are often occurrences of the surreal. Are you mocking meat? Honestly, this can't be real.

As we wade through Hepi's works and writings, Long Prawn gets lost in a wistful feeling of intimacy and a veneer-like illusion of the everyday. The frustration and failure of reality is so palpable, yet through Hepi's grace, we see a way through.

The food presented will hinge on a feeling of detached reality. Those in-between places and flavours that exist only in complex places of multiple meanings. Places where food becomes so detached from the domesticity of eating that they rise to a foreign new meaning.

The Cocktail Party:
Silver Service

*“Of a little , take a little ;
Manners so to do : Of a little leave a little ; That is manners too” some doggerall for mannersbit.*

When a final canapé rests, solemn on the silver tray, the marble cheese board or the hellscape grazing platter, darting eyes shoot about – who is brazen enough to take it? The waiter, weary with the task ahead and a scolding chef who awaits their return, enlists puppy dog eyes, “last one?”.

However, unwritten at the cocktail party are a certain set of rules; one of which is the mannersbit. The mannersbit suggests an adherence that as a guest you should not only have taken all you need but you are satiated to the point where you will leave a little. In Spanish (la de la vergüenza) and Filipino tagalog (dyahe), their word for this means ‘the shame’. So be it manners of shame, the cocktail party awaits.

Hotel Lobby:
The Hotel Plate

On the 30th of May 2019, Ankush Dutta booked in to stay at one of New Delhi's finest 5 star hotels, paying for just one night.

Some 603 days later he left the hotel, where he was staying in the lobby, unnoticed for a severely extended period of time.

Hats off to you Mr Dutta. =

Here's a hobby I picked up in the lobby. Staring into the blackest of coffees, and imagining a goldfish swimming around in there. It pairs perfectly with this barely discernible music, single pats of butter which can't be made from milk, morning television.

I look over to the omlette bar, no one is lining up since they installed the dim sum island and pancake parlour within egg shot. I'll be going though! I'll be getting crab, spinach, cheese and sympathy.

The Convenience Store:
Fast Food

Over a series of two months, Long Prawn and Amrita's video calls have consisted of crunchy conversation. Without fail, Amrita has a new snack, a nouvelle sausage or a dried mango something something.

Second to only Japan, the density of 7/11s in Thailand is the highest per capita.

Things come from the convenience store with at least 10°C of separation. Meaning they are served 10°C separate from the temperature they should be.

The coffee, scoldingly hot; the potato cake warm, floppy but lovely; mineral water, incredibly cold and fizzy; the service, tepid; Everything comes at a price, and if you want it now you, for your convenience, you will have to suffer the cost.
